

Having just this moment learned of the possibility of weakening New Jersey's "Do Not Call" law, I feel I must respond immediately and assertively to urge the F.C.C. to leave the law intact. Unsolicited calls from telemarketers are an intrusion into our homes and, therefore, our privacy. They are invariably an interruption of our household routines which, unlike other forms of advertizing such as mailed flyers and newspaper inserts, demand that we stop what we're doing to attend to them instead of waiting until we have the time to attend to them. New Jersey's law provides for charitable organizations, and businesses with whom we choose to affiliate, to call us, which is fine. But I have been delighted beyond description now that unsolicited telemarketers are no longer permitted to invade my life and my home. Keep the law as it is!!
